Miscellaneous.

The Threatened Persian War.

The last advices from Europe make it highly probable that the difficulty between Persia and England will eventually in a war between these two nations, in which Russia will probably participate. The bloody record of Sebastopol is scarcely closed in the sky of the East, is darkened with the gloomy omens of another and perhaps equally deadly struggle. The subject cannot fail to be interesting to the public, and it may be well for us to give the particulars of the difficulty, as drawn from English sources, of course, none other being open to us. The point in dispute involves the independence of Herat, situated near the extreme Eastern frontier of Persia, and a place of great commercial and political importance; commanding as it does, to a great extent, the trade of the Caspian and the Indus. Heretofore the English Government has maintained amicable and reciprocal commercial relations with Herat, as well as with the other small tribes which lie along the boundary of the English possessions from Afghanistan on the north to Belochistan on the South, and from Persia in the west to the Indus in the east. The position of Herat as the central point on the old route of trade between the Caspian and the Indus, and as the outpost, so to speak, between Persia and the English territory, have caused the English Government to look upon it as a point to be jealously guarded against all foreign interference or subjugation. Our readers will remember at what cost the British Government won the Northwest Provinces and that of Cande, and that the object of that object of that struggle was to establish the control of the East India Company over the territory bounded by the Indus on the West, the mountains of Cashmere on the North, having Peshawar for its extreme station on the Northwest—the latter being the key to the mountain passes of Cabul, which also command Bokhara, Khiva, Herat, Kandahar, and the many other small territories between Persia and the Indus. Herat has been the point at which the exertions of Persia to extend her power Eastward toward the Indus have been met and successfully checked. The supply of European goods, which has heretofore been transported from the Caspian by caravans passing through the Northern portion of Persia and through Herat, Kandahar, etc., has been by the efforts of England during the past few years diverted to the channel of the Indus by which vessels are enabled to take freight within a day's journey of Cabul, and at Karachi the harbor has been deepened, there being enlarged and a fair established with much success. From this hasty glance at the situation of things, it will be seen at once that any attempt on the part of a hostile power to seize upon Herat and thereby threaten to destroy the building relations which have cost the English so much, and which are so desirable, would necessarily be regarded as important, and dangerous to the interests of the latter.

A treaty was entered into between England and Persia, by which the latter agreed to abandon all designs upon Herat and the numerous small tribes which were protected by that strong hold, and whom the English had formed friendly and profitable alliances. Under these circumstances, Persia has taken advantage of European war, it is claimed with the encouragement and secret co-operation of Russia, to make an attempt upon Herat, led it is said by Russian officers, the object of which is undoubtedly to obtain control over the passes of the Indus. The English Government demands the evacuation of Herat on the part of Persia, Payment of expenses, dismissal of the Persian Minister at Constantinople, and the latter had proceeded to Persia. Persia is said to have assented to the return of Mr. Murray, the English Minister, to restore Herat, and compensate the Heratians; but the other points are in abeyance. The English public is opposed to a war, and the London Correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune says:

"Lord Russell, aware of this opposition, tried to arrange this difficulty with the Persian Ambassador, Feruk Khan, who chanced to be at Constantinople; the proposed terms being, of course, the restitution of Herat and the dismissal of the Grand Vizier, who bears the title of Shah's Envoy. Should the Shah refuse to go this length, then the war will be seriously carried on, without regarding the opinions of England."

Although there is doubtless some cause for apprehension, yet we hardly think there will be a serious war at present. The concessions which the Shah has already made, according to the news by the "Asia," seem to show a disposition on his part to back out, and unless he be strongly supported and urged on by Russia, he will probably accede to the demands of England—Cleveland Leader.

A "Chilling" Adventure.

As a specimen of the adventures with which Dr. Kane's Narrative of Explorations in the Arctic regions abounds we give the following. Dr. Kane and his Esquimaux hunter named Hans take a trip after seals:

I started with Hans and five dogs, all we could muster from our disabled pack, and reached the "Piney Berg" in a single hour's run. But where was the water! where the seal! The floe had closed, and the crushed ice was all that told of our intended hunting ground.

Ascending the berg, however, we could see to the north and west the dark clouds of ice that betokens water. It ran through our old battle ground, the Gery Belt—the labyrinth of our lingering after the frozen party of last winter. I had not been over it since, and the feeling it gave me was anything but joyous.

In a couple of hours we emerged upon a plain unlimited to the eye, and smooth as a billiard table. Feathers of young frosting gave a plishable nap to its surface, and the dark horizon dark columns of frost smoke which pointed clearly to the open water. The ice was firm enough: our experience satisfied us that it was not very recent freezing. We pushed on without hesitation, cheering ourselves with the expectation of coming every minute to the seals. We passed a second ice growth; it was not so strong as the one we had just come over, but still safe for a party like ours. On we went at a brisker rate, may be for another mile, when Hans sung out at the top of his voice, "Pusey! pusey! seal, seal!"

At the same instant the dogs bounded forward, and, as I looked up, I saw crowds of grey netsie, the rough or hispid seal of the whalers, sporting in an open sea of water. I had hardly welcomed the spectacle, when I saw we had passed upon a new belt of ice that was obviously unsafe. To the right, and left, and front, was one great expanse of snow flowered ice. The nearest floe was a mere lump, which stood like an island in the white level. To turn was impossible; we had to keep our goal. We urged on the dogs with whip and voice, the ice rolling like leather beneath the sledge runners; it was more than a mile to the lump of solid ice. Fear gave to the poor beasts their utmost speed, and our voices were soon hushed in silence.

The suspense, unrelieved by action or efforts, was intolerable. We knew that there was no remedy but to reach the floe, and that everything depended upon our dogs, and our dogs alone. A moment's check would plunge the whole concern into the rapid tide way. No prospect of mind or resource, bodily or mental could avail us. The seals for we were now near enough to see their expressive faces—were looking at us with that strange curiosity which seems to be their characteristic expression. We must have passed some fifty of them, breast high out of water, mocking us by their self complacency.

The desperate race against fate could not last. The rolling of the tough sledge in water terrified our dogs, and when with fifty paces from the floe they paused—The latter runner went through; our leader "Toodlamik" followed; and in one second the entire lot was submerged. My first thought was to liberate the dogs. I leaped forward to cut poor Tood's traces, and the next instant was swimming in a little circle of pasty ice and water along-side him. Hans, dear good fellow, drew near to help me, uttering piteous expressions in broken English; but I ordered him to throw himself on his belly, with his hands and legs extended, and to make for the island by clogging himself forward with his jack-knife. In the meantime—a mere instant—I was floundering about with sledge, dogs and lines, in confused puddle around me.

I succeeded in cutting poor Tood's lines, and letting him scramble to the ice—for the poor fellow was drowning me with his piteous cries—and made my way for the sledge; but I found that it would not buoy, and that I had recourse but to try the circumference of the hole. Around this I paddled faithfully, the miserable ice always yielding when my hopes of a lodgement were greatest. During this process I enlarged my circle of operations to a very uncomfortable diameter, and was beginning to feel weaker after every effort. Hans, meanwhile, had reached the firm ice, and was on his knees, like a good Moravian, praying incoherently in English and Esquimaux; at every fresh crushing in of the ice he would ejaculate "God!" and when I recommended my paddling, he recommended his prayers.

I was nearly gone. My knife had been lost in cutting out the dogs, and a spare one which I carried in my trousers pocket was so enveloped in the wet skins that I could not reach it. I owed my extrication at last to a newly broken team dog, who was still fast to the sledge; and in struggling carried one of the runners close against the edge of the circle. All my previous attempts to use the sledges as a bridge had failed, for it broke through to the much greater injury of the ice. I felt that it was a last chance. I threw myself on my back, so as to lessen as much as possible my weight, and placed the nape of my neck against the rim of the edge of the ice, and then with caution, slowly bent my leg, and placing the ball of my moccasined foot against the sledge, I pressed steadily against the runner, listening to the half yielding crunch of the ice beneath.

Presently I felt my head was pillowed by the ice, and that my wet fur jumper was sliding up the surface. Next came my shoulders; they were fairly on. One more decided push, and I was launched upon the ice and safe. I reached the ice floe, and we saved all the dogs, but the sledge, kayak, tent, guns, snow shoes, and everything else were left behind. The thermometer at eight degrees will keep them frozen fast in the sledge till we can come and cut them out.

NEW ENGLAND UNANIMOUS.—After the fourth of March New England will not have a pro-slavery Congressman. The new Democratic policy has been the death to them all. Toucy lost his seat by his willingness to run after runaway negroes—Bradbury repeated himself with the Missouri Compromise—Wells and Williams sacrificed themselves on the altar of friendship for Pierce—Everett's absence from the Nebraska vote has led to his absence elsewhere—James has upheld the administration to his own downfall—Allen, the sole remaining Democrat from New England, will owe his place, if he keeps it, to his free soil sympathies and votes; while in the other House every representative from Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island, is a thorough-going and uncompromising Republican. Poor encouragement for dough-faces in that "section"—Ab. Eve. Jour.

STILL ON THE RUN, LOADED DOWN WITH BOOTS & SHOES.

THE UNDERSIGNED respectfully informs his old friends and the public generally that he is still full of a good article of

Ladies' & Gentlemen's,
Boys' and Misses' Boots and Shoes. Every few days you may see them tumbling out of boxes all marked "C. Hatt, Millersburg, O."

Everybody wonders what Hatt does with the goods he gets. Why he sells them, of course. The reason he can't sell what others are crying over their stock, is known to him and his customers alone. He also keeps of every description, which he will sell cheap. He believes he owes his success heretofore to honest and straightforward dealing and he will endeavor to render himself worthy of the confidence of his customers.

YOUNG KATHAM.—The immense popularity of this celebrated Yulet article is entirely without precedent. Its sale is nearly 1,000,000 bottles per year, and the demand is constantly increasing. It restores the Hair when it has fallen out; preserves and beautifies it, imparting to it a beautiful gloss; removes dandruff and keeps the Hair perfectly clean while its delightful perfume renders it the pleasantest article ever used. Sold everywhere by all respectable dealers, and in Millersburg at the BOOK AND FANCY STORE.

Wm. A. Batchelor's
HAIR DYE.
MONKEY'S parrot and dog may be taught to imitate some of the outward forms and actions of humanity—and foxes manifest an aptness in stealing quite equal to the generalization of mankind—but to man alone is given the ability to originate, contrive and construct, and even the animal seems to divide by his own acts his species into the different genus of men, or originators, contrivers and constructors—and monkey parrots and foxes, or imitators, preceptors and spectators. Mark the recognition: Wm. A. Batchelor, of 233 Broadway, New York, having by perseverance and years of toil and experiments, succeeded in producing a Hair Dye, which he has received, fifteen Medals and Diplomas—and, by all admitted to be perfect in all respects, a host of imitating monkeys and piratical pretenses, who always see the paths of genius and toil, and to take advantage of the wit they do not possess themselves, have sprung upon the trail laid out by "Batchelor." With peculiar pertinacity they seek and, with great success, they have bravado, every one who will listen to them, and they frequently succeed in gaining credit for themselves and trash. To guard the unsuspecting, the original and genuine Wm. A. Batchelor's Hair Dye is now put up with costly steel plate engraving, and his signature thereon on four sides of the box, and the address, 233 Broadway, New York.
